

Scott P. Casey

Senior Vice President of Strategic Business Development and Chief Technology Officer

Scott joined EdR in 2006, advancing to his current position in July 2013. He oversees external technology related to housing, development and construction initiatives including internet services, cable television, security surveillance and access control at EdR communities, in addition to all sustainability strategies and initiatives and compliance. He reports directly to EdR's president.

Scott is also responsible for developing strategic business partnerships geared towards creating ancillary programs that generate revenue and leasing opportunities for each property. He identifies innovative and often untapped revenue streams through his understanding of student life, each property's technological needs, and his long-time association with many of the housing industry's leading technology service providers. Scott sits on the board of PlayPro Media and Elauwit Networks — EdR's technology partner — and is the chair of Elauwit's business development committee.

Scott began his career at Arthur Andersen in January 1990. He worked nationally with the firm to develop software initiatives including new IT policies and performed small business risk technology audits, advancing to director of technology in 1995. He was formerly chief information officer and senior vice president with Orange Lake Resort & Country Club in Orlando, Florida. Scott also previously co-founded a real estate investment firm, overseeing real estate transactions as well as residential and commercial construction. His parallel experience in both technology and real estate has provided the ideal foundation for the dual role he currently occupies at EdR.
